Centre for Global Public Policy, USA, Faculty & Co-Director, Faculty of Global Governance, 31.9.2009Doctors negotiate higher fees for a 55-year-old who has gone broke In an attempt to balance its budget and shore up revenue, the state government has introduced a new health insurance plan for lower income earners. The move follows the earlier introduction of a registered nurse for the state’s dental services and a new funding model for public hospitals. On October 1, the Health Ministry introduced the New Model of Integrated Insurance (NMI). It is a 12-month pilot project wherein the government is subsidising health insurance premiums for families with taxable income between $15,000 and $60,000 a year. Previously, those earning a weekly salary of $500 had to pay out of pocket if they needed to see a doctor. “We saw that the gap between the upper and lower income earners was too big,” said Dr Fozil Alam, secretary of the Health Ministry’s health insurance division. “We want to bridge the gap and make the health insurance accessible to all.” Families with a weekly income of $1,250 to $2,500 are expected to see a benefit of $94 a month, according to the government. Some working children will get $129, while 6d1f23a050
